point out that, it is a teachers responsibility to supervise pupils at all times while on school excursions; children should not be lost in the first place! A teacher in 'loco parentis' (someone who is in place of a parent) holds full responsibility and should look after a child like their own. In any case, stickers/high-visibility jackets can be supplied in order to ensure that all pupils are visible at all times. A further point made by parents is that uniform can be just as expensive as casual clothing; especially if there is more than one sibling. In some cases, a customised blazer can cost up to £50 and even ties can be surprisingly costly. In addition, parents argue that they will feel pressured into ensuring uniform is washed and prepared so that their child meets the required standard of appearance. Moreover, this would be notably burdensome primarily after a long, labourious day at work.

After considering both sides of the argument, it is clear that there are very persuasive points for abolishing school uniform. However, I'm sure you will agree that wearing school uniform brings a sense of pride and belonging to a community. Yes, choosing your own clothes may be one way of expressing your personality, however, you should not only be judged by your appearance.

Should School Uniform be banned?

The majority of pupils in the United Kingdom are ~~now~~ <sup>currently</sup> attending school wearing a uniform. Even though uniform is yet to be obligatory for primary aged students, headmasters of schools ~~convict~~ <sup>convict</sup> it should be, therefore making it a fundamental element of school life. Despite this, parents state that this ~~possibly could~~ <sup>could</sup> possibly result in financial pressure. Consequently, perceptable debate is taking place as to whether school uniform should be abolished.

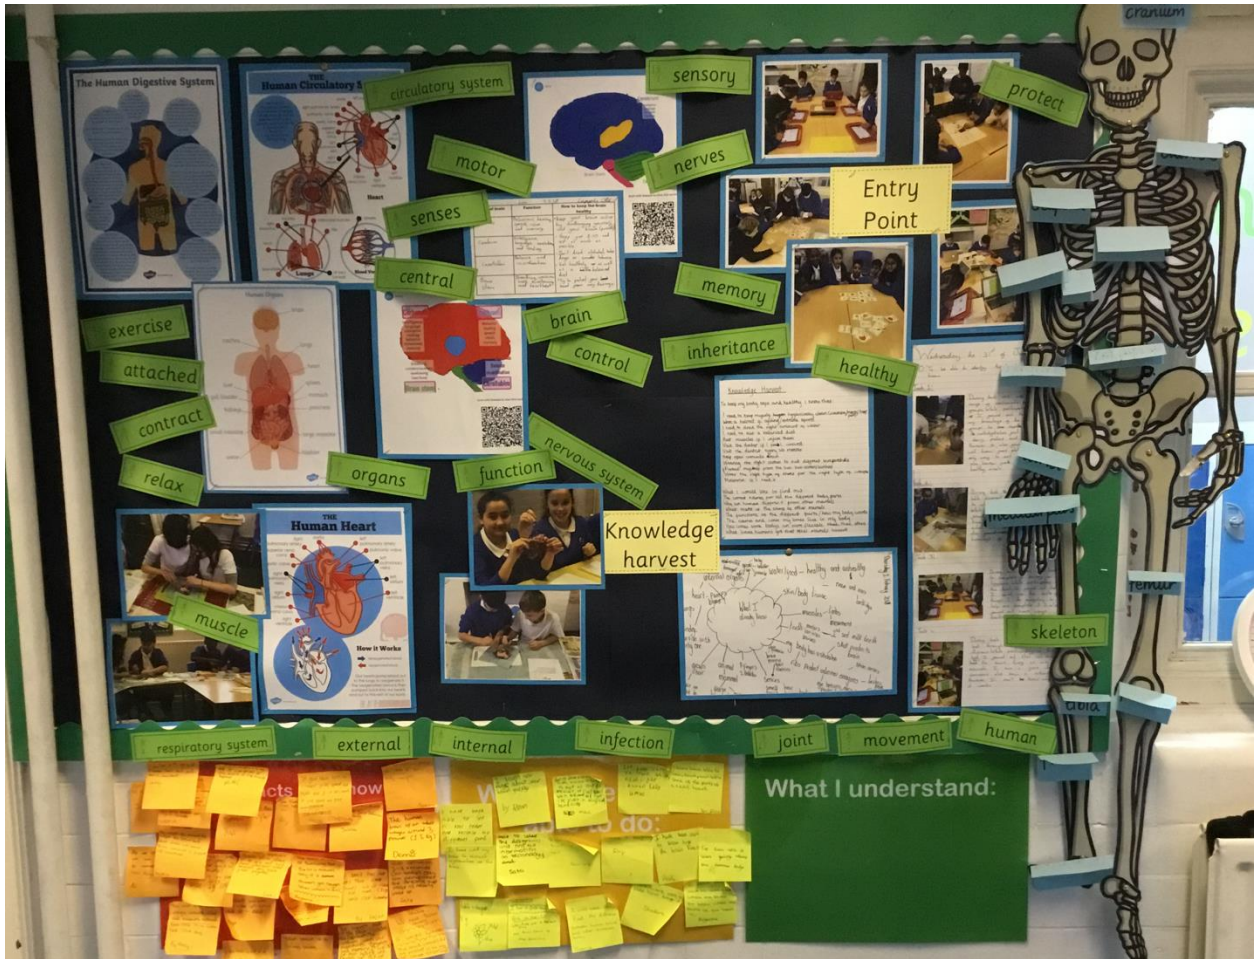

There is no doubt that having to wear uniform possesses many benefits to both pupils and their careers; no one can deny that uniform can give a student the sense of belonging to a ~~community~~ school community as all of the pupils attending will wear the required uniform therefore demonstrating equality for all. In these instances, all pupils will not feel superior or inferior to their peers. Consequently, the risk of social bullying is minimised as ~~no body~~ <sup>no one</sup> would be ~~the~~ wearing a more expensive or ~~networthy~~ outfit. Furthermore, if students arrived at school wearing a particular ~~st~~ style of clothing, they may be judged based upon what they ~~are wear~~ <sup>have</sup> chosen to wear or if their garments are not currently fashionable. Should expressing one's individuality cause so much distress?

Surley you'll agree that parents should not suffer under financial burdens due to the extortionate expense of uniform; particularly schools that require specialized items (logoed blazers, sportswear and costly ties)? Buying uniform could cost an immense price of £300 ~~and~~ annually. Therefore, children are spending less time with their parents or carers who are working longer hours, ~~be able to be able to~~ afford the necessary uniform. What overall ~~so~~ impact could this create? For now, maybe pupils should be able to express themselves through their own clothes, clothes?!

Should School uniform be banned?

The vast majority of schools throughout the U.K. make a compulsory uniform for pupils, however, some pupils believe that the price of school uniforms have increased, resulting in financial pressure on parents. Whereas, a large quantity of other pupils claim that having the chance to wear a school uniform prepares them for the future. Consequently, this issue has led to a substantial debate on whether school uniform should be banned. Excellent introduction!

In the past few years, hard-working parents have been put under pressure, by having to make sure that their child's school uniform is washed, dried and ironed, ready for the new day. Furthermore, it would seem that having more than one child in the family, it may be difficult for parents whom cannot manage affording the freedom to choose more children. Nevertheless, by having the freedom to choose their own clothes, it is proven that pupils are more likely to mature and develop independence and other important organisational skills, to make sure that they are prepared for school. A further point that a large quantity of pupils would agree that it is essential for students all over the U.K. to convey their expression of individuality as well as creativity; in addition to what has been said, students could share their style with friends and most important feel comfortable in class. The most important reason school uniform should be banned is because, most students complain that by having school uniform it would
